TSH aero and FAI Flight Ambulance Intl. flying to the rescue in Central America and the Caribbean

Since its creation in 1986 FAI Flight Ambulance International. has become one of the leading medical transport agencies in the world, providing emergency services 24/7 in hot spots around the globe.

Earlier this week, TSH aero proudly announced that they have been named the official representative for the Nuremberg based company, providing medical evacuation services throughout Central America and the Caribbean.

"FAI's fleet of dedicated intensive care equipped jets is ready to be dispatched at anytime, 24/7, to any place in the world," said TSH aero founder Thierry S. Huguenin.

Each FAI flight is a state of the art Medevac aircraft designed to accommodate up to two Lifeport intensive care units with stretchers and experienced staff of highly qualified medical teams comprising of an intensive care doctor and intensive care paramedic in addition to the flying crew.

The company's emergency services include bedside to bedside support for patients moving from one medical facility to another, and all treatments and procedures performed onboard adhere strictly to international medical standards.

Huguenin and his staff have over 17 years experience in aircraft acquisitions and sales, aircraft management and, most importantly, in air charter. To date the organization has been named a member of the Baltic Air Charter Association and the National Business Aviation Association, and they're proud to extend their international reputation to include providing local emergency medical evacuation services with FAI.

Founded in 1986, and proudly boasting almost a decade of specialized emergency air evacuation services in hot spots like Iraq, Afghanistan and the Sudan, Flight Ambulance International is one of the leading air ambulance service providers in the world. FAI operates a full range cabin size fleet of air ambulance jets starting with the light jet Lear 35A series to the mid-size Lear 55/60 series and the large, heavy jet Challenger 604.

The company has been awarded Full Accreditation Special Care by EURAMI the highest certification granted to an air ambulance operator, and continues to maintain a consistent presence as a part of peacekeeping missions throughout Africa.

"Specialized in worldwide air ambulance...FAI is one of the few companies in General Aviation not much effected by the financial crisis," said FAI CEO Siegfried Axtmann. "No matter where the patients are, FAI will transport them where and when they wish. Particularly for time critical cases in an area such as the Caribbean, FAI requires local expertise in order to facilitate a safe transfer of patients to a center of excellence, therefore we are glad to announce our cooperation with our representative Thierry Huguenin."
